Garden City High School Students Shadow Local Professionals

Twenty Garden City High School students of business teacher Gene Rochler (front row, right) shadowed local professionals on “Teens on the Job” day in February. “Students visited sites that included the Stewart, Stratford, and Homestead schools, the Garden City Hotel, Congresswoman Rice, and various local law and technology businesses.”

Students later submitted reflective summaries of their “shadowing” experiences: “My experience in the ‘Teens on the Job’ program was wonderful,” wrote Chloe. “I went to Stratford school to experience what it is like to be an elementary school teacher.”

Amanda wrote, “Thank you for putting together the ‘Teens on the Job’ program. Learning about what an architect does every day has made me more interested in the field.” And, Emily shared, “I visited [a local law firm], where I learned about the many fields of law such as helping people file grievances on their homes.”

The district would like to thank Mr. Rochler and all the local professionals who took time out of their busy schedules to provide our high school students with a taste of their professions.
